

to a wide circle. Clinical and pathological aspects are dealt with in great detail. A particularly useful section deals with treatment and complications. The pathology of the bone marrow, the spleen, liver and lymph nodes is well described and illustrated with black and white light and electron micrographs. Cytochemistry is an important defining investigation. It is clearly described and illustrated by black and white pictures; colour would have been better, but obviously more expensive. Ultra-structure is dealt with at length in almost 20 pages and is generously illustrated; a brief summary of the essential features at the end of this section would have been helpful.

Immunological aspects of the Hairy Cell are very complicated and often controversial and I welcome the opening positive statement with which each sub-section begins. The monograph ends with a useful section on the changes in other haemic cells in HC leukaemia and a summary of the diagnostic features. There are almost 400 references and the subject index is comprehensive.

This book makes authoritative interesting reading of a fascinating subject and I thoroughly recommend it.
